History of Puddicombe House

Step into Ontario history...

Built in 1868, in the elegant Italianate architectural style, Puddicombe House first served as the home of Samuel Merner, a prominent New Hamburg businessman and politician. Merner spared no expense in the construction or decorative details of his grand house. Located on Peel Street in central downtown, the exterior boasted characteristic Italianate gables, gracious porches and heavily ornamented windows.

In 2004, the Cressman family of New Hamburg purchased Puddicombe House. Extensive renovations were completed and the house now features a restaurant, inn, spa and hair salon. Preserving and honouring the buildings architectural and historical history was paramount in the Cressman plans.

The New Year of 2016 saw the opening of the Puddicombe Grand Hall. Located behind the original Puddicombe House, the hall is architecturally-designed to complement the original building. Puddicombe's Grand Hall welcomes weddings and other celebrations for up to 225 guests.
